The speaker shared valuable insights on the significance of self-belief, particularly during the formative first year of engineering. He highlighted that belief in oneself is the foundation for achieving any goal, and without it, progress becomes difficult.

Mr. Aher provided an engaging discussion on the practical ways students can set goals and take meaningful steps toward achieving them. He also shared various motivational tricks and strategies, such as time management, maintaining focus, and dealing with failures as part of the growth process.

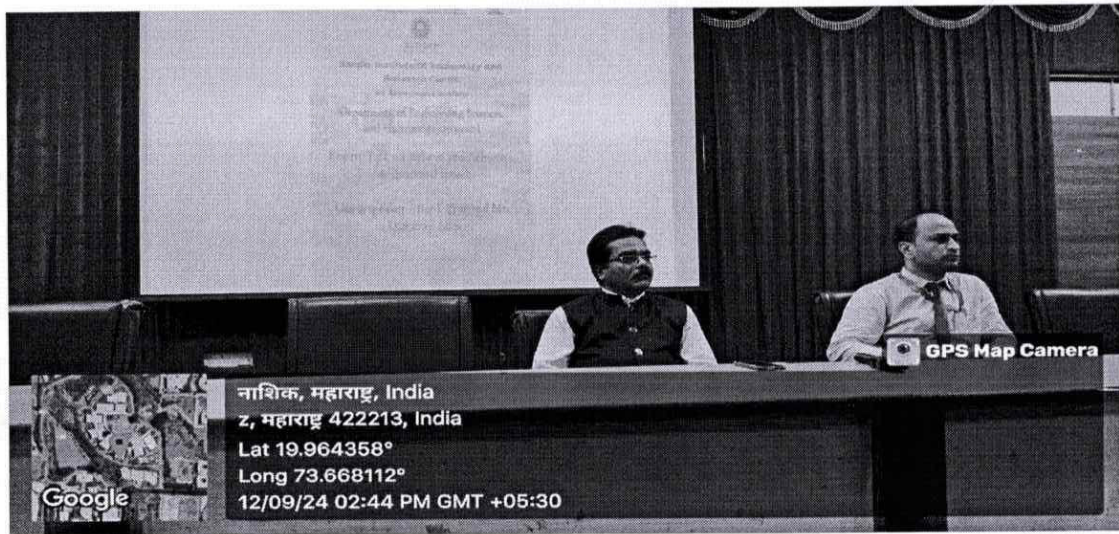

Throughout the session, Mr. Aher encouraged students to visualize their goals, stay determined, and not be discouraged by setbacks. His anecdotes, drawn from years of experience, resonated well with the students, who were encouraged to adopt a proactive approach to their studies and personal growth.

An interactive Q&A session followed, where students asked questions about their concerns regarding academic challenges and staying motivated. Mr. Aher addressed each question with practical suggestions, reiterating the importance of belief and perseverance.
